He said that he was seeking legislation at the present session of the Legislature to meet these conditions by the creation of two more courts of general sessions and three new judges.

Attorney General Nelson urged the organization of all the district attorneys in the State in an active operating body. He paid his respects to "educators" and reformers. Children are no longer respect for the law and the Constitution in the home and in the district schools.

"There are groups," the Attorney General said, "who teach that the Constitution is old and antiquated and should be changed. When we were children the law was driven into us with a stick. I don't know what a stick can do now, but I know that the attitude of educators, reformers and even fathers and mothers must be changed. They must be made to respect the law and to educate that respect in their children."

"Masses are clamoring for the Federal Government to do what the local governments have failed to do," declared Deputy United States Attorney General Crim. "The whole intent of the Constitution is to provide for local self government; it is the foundation of our civilization. We should return to it, and the only way we can do so is for the local authorities to take their proper place in the prosecution of the law."

To New York newspaper representatives District Attorney Nelson stated that there is no crime wave in New York.

force of the tempest before it reached New York, early reported heavy damage. Shingles were blown off the houses at Sea Bright and shutters were blown off at Long Branch. Flagpoles were twisted, signs torn down and heavy seas driven inland all along the coast.

Long Island points reported similar experiences. At Sandy Hook a wind velocity of 72 miles an hour was reported at noon. The registering apparatus on top of the Whitehall Building here was so coated with ice no official record could be made of the wind's force here.

The last storm approximating today's was on March 1, 1914, when the wind was 54 miles an hour and the barometer got down to 29.38. At 1.30 today the barometer registered 29.94.

New York Stock Exchange business was seriously crippled on account of wire trouble. It was reported by the Western Union that forty-four wires were down between Philadelphia and Baltimore and twenty-nine between Philadelphia and Harrisburg.

None of the large wire houses that are members of the Stock Exchange was able to maintain an uninterrupted service. One house stated that it was operating only 50 per cent. of its Southern wires and only one of three of its Western wires.

The first loss of life was reported from the Bronx, Anna Lahart, fourteen, of 239th Street and Yorkers Avenue, was killed when a limb blown off a tree struck her while she was walking on 239th Street, near Spuyten Duyvil Parkway.

A chimney 125 feet high was blown over on Power House No. 17 of the Bush Terminal, 40th Street and Second Avenue, Brooklyn, forty men narrowly escaped injury.

James Conditine, traffic policeman at Fourth Street and Broadway, had his nose ripped when a flying object blew across his face. He went to his home, No. 292 West 142d Street, after being treated by Dr. McCoy of St. Vincent's Hospital.

Special policemen were detailed to assist women across the streets at busy corners. They were also warned to keep off the west side of Broadway.

At the Woolworth Building the wind blew with such force along Barclay Street that virtually every person who attempted to cross was blown off his or her feet.

Wind, which at noon had reached forty miles an hour and rapidly getting stronger, is driving in snow which will combine with the gales to make the worst storm of the winter.

Shutters were blown off houses at Long Branch, N. J., and the official storm warning flags had to be removed because the flagpole was being bent. The Weather Bureau there reported at 12 o'clock.

In New York damage was early reported along the water front, especially the Brooklyn beaches, while at 66th Street and Fifth Avenue the wind blew over a horse and wagon. It is feared that the storm will blow hundreds of small craft onto the beaches and that accidents will reach a large total. Reports of injuries due to the slippery streets began coming in early.

Less than an hour after the first snow fell the Street Cleaning Department had all its 255 pieces of snow removal machinery at work. Shortly after that its full regular force of 7,000 was busy and by 9.30 4,000 "extras" had been added. The department wants from 6,000 to 8,000 more temporary workers.

Surface car tracks were blocked all over the city when truck horses lost their footing and were unable to rise. All car lines and the Fifth Avenue Bus Co. had their snow ploughs out early, but the heavy winds had blown

PRESIDENT PUTS BONUS SQUARELY UP TO CONGRESS

If Funding Bill Is Passed, Then Soldiers May Get a Chance.

WILL MAKE NO PROMISE.

Trouble Through Gold Shipments if Allies Pay May Be Averted by Bonds.

By David Lawrence.
(Special Correspondent of The Evening World.)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (Copyright, 1922).—President Harding's attitude toward the soldiers' bonus is one of continued belief in soldier compensation, but of reluctance to associate the foreign debt question with it. The truth of the matter is that Mr. Harding has turned the tables on those who asked for his approval to a soldier bonus bill contingent upon the Allied war debt payments. The President inquired how it was possible even to talk about getting money from the Allies when Congress is delaying the passage of the bill which authorizes a commission of five to negotiate with foreign Governments on the payment of principal and interest. In other words, if Congress will hurry up and pass the Funding Bill, then some clear idea may be obtained as to whether any revenues may be expected from the Allies.

Up to this time not a single thing has been done toward fixing a time for the payment of either interest or principal. No private business would allow an immense debt to run along without even a promissory note fixing the dates of payment. Both the President and the Secretary of the Treasury have pleaded with Congress to pass the bill. The House has acted favorably, but the Senate has failed to put the measure through.

Mr. Harding is withholding acceptance of the invitation to the Genoa Conference because he wants to show the business men of the United States and the agriculturalists and all others who look forward hopefully to the effects on American business of the conference that the United States is powerless to enter the conference unless the Funding Bill has passed.

The President feels that it would be hazardous to place any reliance on the immediate flow of any substantial revenue from the Allies to the United States, sufficient at any rate to pay a soldier bonus, the cost of which has been variously estimated at upward of a billion dollars. It may be that when the Allies and the United States arrange for the funding of the debt, no gold will be shipped but a new issue of bonds made which will be guaranteed by the Allied Powers to the United States, and which in turn may be sold by our Government at an attractive rate of interest in order to get sufficient money to pay a soldier bonus; but almost everybody believes the time for such a move is far off as the Government finances are not strong enough yet to stand such a strain and probably will not be for two or three years.

Meanwhile the members of Congress who are up for re-election next fall feel they must do something to placate the soldier vote. Mr. Harding knows the attitude of a member of Congress on the eve of re-election and sympathizes with the effort to get something done. But, on the other hand, he knows also that Republican sentiment generally is not altogether pleased with the new Revenue Bill and that the demand for lower taxation is still strong. It's a question therefore of pleasing one group or class with the chance of antagonizing the business and other elements of the country who by their contributions and votes make Republican victories possible.

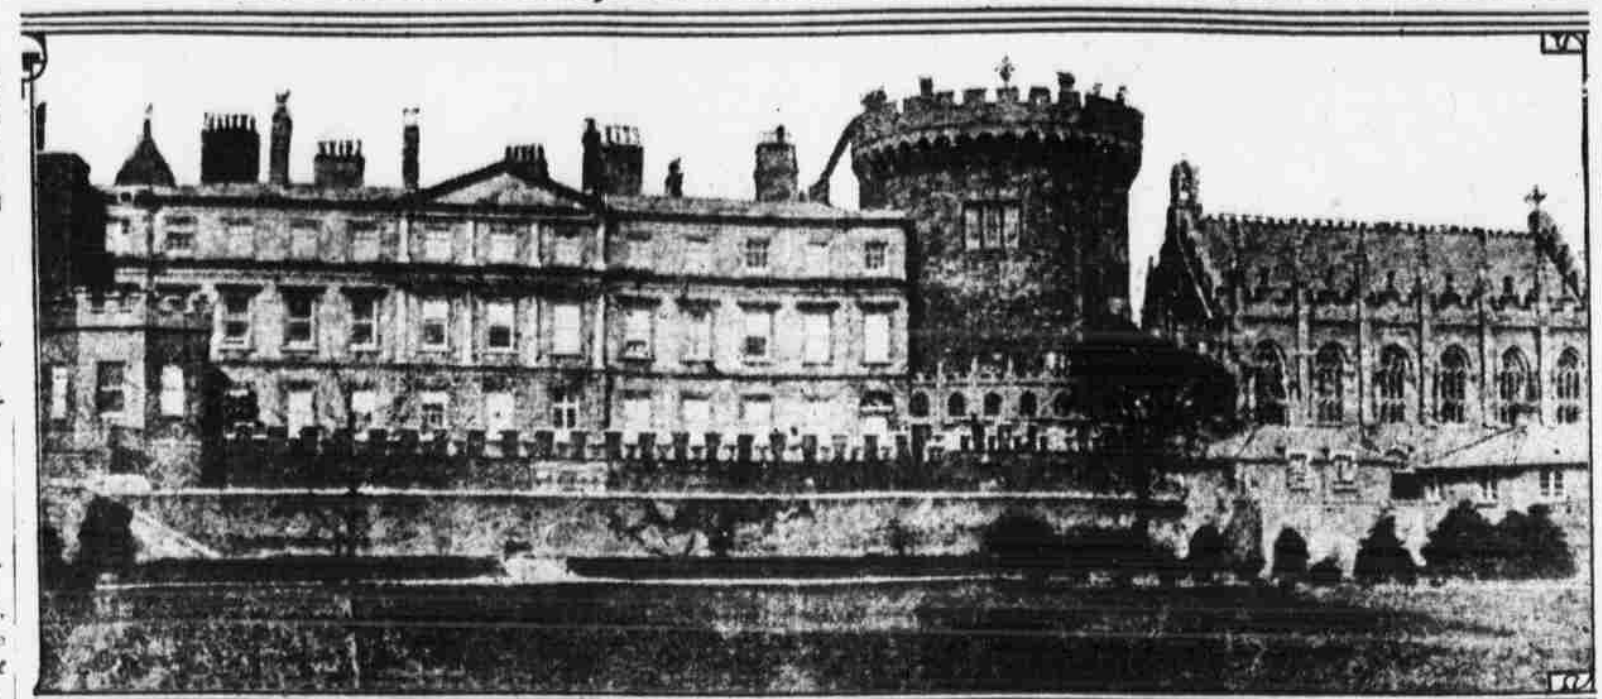

The Democrats opposed the bonus, too. Secretary Houston of the last Administration fought it. So the soldiers would have small comfort in turning from one party to another except as a protest vote. The prospects are that Congress may act and square itself with the electorate, but that Mr. Harding will take the responsibility of disapproving it on the ground that a sound method for raising the necessary funds will not have been provided.

most of the snow from the middle of the avenues to the curb.

The first delay in ferry service was reported when the Staten Island boat due at the Battery at 7.40 did not arrive until 8 o'clock. This was due as much to backing a head wind as to storm congestion. But the regular schedule was abandoned and boats were kept moving as soon as they were loaded. The Municipal Ferry to 23rd Street, Brooklyn, also was off schedule.

Ocean traffic was seriously affected. Many boats which had put out early turned back, and others remained in the sheltered harbor. Five freighters reached Quarantine and anchored early in the morning, but eleven other boats, among them pas-enter a demurrer. It is understood she went to Paris last spring and immediately took steps to file her suit. All her friends knew, however, was that she was not on the best of terms with her husband. He was served in New York or Washington and entered no defense.

It is understood Mrs. Hitt merely testified that she and her husband were not on terms of affection necessary for married life and that Mr. Hitt refused to renew the conjugal relations. When she decided to make a final effort toward reconciliation Mr. Hitt, it was said, refused to allow her to return home, saying he did not care what she did, so long as she did not bother him. A friend of Mrs. Hitt said it was merely a case of "two charming young people not suited to each other, who never should have been married," the Paris cable says.

Mrs. Hitt returned to the United States soon after the final decree was entered. Washington dispatches say she has spent most of her time since at the family country home, at Middleburg, Va., but frequently visits her mother in Washington. Mr. Hitt has been at the home of his mother, in Washington, and while friends there believed they had been divorced, they did not know definitely. They are said to see each other frequently since the divorce, and to be "getting on famously."

During the time it was rumored Miss Elkins was to wed the Duke of the Abruzzi some years ago, the romance attracted so much attention to the Elkins family virtually was driven into obscurity. When the Duke arrived in Washington, in 1908, he was just back from exploration triumphs. Scores of times their engagement was "reported," but never admitted officially. When the Duke went back to Italy it was rumored he was going to get the royal consent to the marriage. Then suddenly "Billy" Hitt, son of a Congressman from Illinois, won the heiress, to whom he had been attentive for years. Both families and the letters were said to have aided. The marriage took place in October, 1912.

ACCIDENTS DUE TO THE SLIPPERY STREETS.

Hospitals and the police were kept busy to-day by numerous accidents resulting from slippery pavements. Michael McGrath, No. 218 East 119th Street, slipped and fell on the 155th Street Station of the Ninth Avenue "L," injuring his back. Morris Weinberg, No. 1296 Washington Avenue, Bronx, slipped and fell on the 17th Street Station of the Third Avenue "L," injuring his back. Elsie De Appuzzo, No. 1405 Amsterdam Avenue, slipped in the hallway of No. 41 East 11th Street, breaking her left ankle. Taken to St. Vincent's Hospital.

Isabelle Tick, No. 227 Lenox Avenue, slipped while crossing 119th Street and Seventh Avenue. She was hit by an automobile driven by Edward Hootie of New Rochelle. She was taken home.

Gus Amundson, No. 221 Fifth Street, Jersey City, while clearing the snow from the roof of a shed at No. 116 Hudson Street, slipped and fell through, breaking his leg. He was taken to the Volunteer Hospital. Mark Kay, No. 4 East 19th Street, was taken to Flower Hospital with contusions of the back and legs when the wind blew over a horse and wagon he was driving at 66th Street and Fifth Avenue. Kay was thrown to the street.

Morris A. Bok, Plainfield, N. J., had his nose broken when he collided with an unknown man in front of No. 111 Broadway. Both men were dodging the sleet and wind and did not see each other.

John Ryan, No. 112 East 125th Street, a member of Hitt and Elkins Company No. 26, was struck by a falling sign in front of No. 14 West 125th Street and a shoulder bone was broken. Nat Silver, No. 54 East 11th Street, one of a group that afterward tried to secure this sign, which was being blown along the street, was also injured about the thigh. Both were taken to the Harlem Hospital.

LUGGLARS DRUG YOUNG GIRL IN COME AND CARRY $75,000 LOOT AWAY IN MOTOR TRUCK

Believed Robbers, Posing as Insurance Men, Had Inspected Rich Treasures.

Several separate lines of inquiry have been opened by the police in their efforts to solve the $75,000 burglary in the home of Mrs. Regina Tarrab, No. 6314 Bay Parkway, Brooklyn, where at least a truckload of Oriental treasures were obtained Monday night after Adele, the sixteen-year-old daughter, had been drugged.

The nature of the drug used, the way the burglars emptied the house of its bulky valuables without attracting attention, the way the truck got away unobserved, and the apparent familiarity of the burglars with the premises—these are some of the features that puzzle the police. They are also interested in a report that a large number of bogus "insurance company inspectors" had examined the loot some time before it was taken.

The burglary insurance amounted to $75,000 and was issued by the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company through the offices of Dorfman and Dando, brokers, No. 159 Broadway, Manhattan.

The prolonged action of the drug—indicated by the fact that the girl is still in a stupor to-day—has caused perplexity as to its nature. The physicians said it had the odor of chloroform and undoubtedly had a chloroform base, but it is believed that some other ingredient must have been included, and there is grave anxiety for Miss Tarrab.

GIRL VICTIM OF DRUG TELLS HER STORY.

She has had a number of conscious intervals, in which she has told, bit by bit, the following story:

"Mother and three of my sisters had gone to a theatre in Manhattan. Miguel (her oldest brother) was visiting friends. Marcella, my little sister, was down stairs with me while I played the piano. The others were asleep. I put Marcella to bed and played the piano some more, until Marcella called out that she couldn't sleep and asked me to come up and tell her a story. I did tell her a story and then lay down beside her after she had fallen asleep.

"After a while I was half awake and opened my eyes. I could see that there was a man in the closet. But at the same moment another man that I did not see, because he was behind me, put something over my face and I could not push it away. It had a funny smell and I lost consciousness.

"When I woke again I felt very badly and tried to call out, but there was something wrong with my voice. I was near the window and I kicked my feet through it."

Her foot was badly cut by the glass, but the sound of the smash brought help. The next door neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Kaplan, were about to enter their own house when they heard the crash and saw that the front door of the Tarrab house was open. They have told the police that they went in, found the gas lights burning all through the house, found the girl in a stupor, and summoned help.

Two of her older brothers, Miguel and Rafael, told an Evening World reporter this morning that since the treasures were insured against fire and burglary the house has been visited by at least 200 persons representing themselves as "inspectors" for the insurance companies.

At first these "inspectors" were admitted without question and were able to learn not only which articles in the house were of greatest value, but also the places in the house where the treasures were kept. So that when the time came for the burglary there was no loss of time in searching.

"We waited for a long while about taking insurance on all," said Miguel Tarrab, "for the very reason that the taking of the insurance would make known the presence of the valuable things in the house."

VALUE OF ALL TREASURES IN HOUSE PUT AT $90,000.

He said that when the number of "inspectors" increased the family at last began to demand credentials, and many of the visitors had no credentials. They were not admitted. But it is believed that some of the earlier "inspectors" who did gain admission were bogus. The value of all the treasures in the house was set at $90,000, and the fire insurance was for $75,000. The amount of the burglary insurance has not been made known.

The first display of the goods was made, of course, when they passed the customs inspection last May on the arrival of the family. The goods were declared at that time as being for the personal use of the members of the family.

USED GLOVES TO AVOID FINGERPRINTS.

There were evidently several in the gang, and they used gloves to avoid leaving fingerprints. It is believed that Adele was drugged only because she became restless in her sleep and they were afraid they might wake her. They worked so quietly none of the other children, who slept in the rear, heard a sound.

Among the articles taken were: Seven bed sets of white Canton crepe, hand embroidered with twenty pounds of 18-karat gold, valued at $21,000. These sets had been brought from the Orient, the beginning of wedding trousseaux for each of the seven daughters of the Tarrab house.

Seven sets of bed sheets and pillow cases of finest linen, set off with fillet lace, valued at $12,000; part of the seven trousseaux.

A diamond bracelet set with forty diamonds and 300 emeralds, possessed by the family for years and last owned by the oldest daughter. No value was set on this.

An Oriental gambling table, inlaid with gold and pearls. The table was thirty inches high, thirty-six inches long and twenty inches wide. It attracted much attention when it was brought from Paris several years ago, having then been valued at $20,000.

Practically all the wearable clothing of the family of ten—Mrs. Tarrab and her nine children.

Cash estimated at $2,000.

A solitaire diamond ring, $500.

Mrs. Tarrab said one piece of jewelry taken was a watch of rare French design set with 40 diamonds and 313 pearls. She was unable to fix its value, but said there was supposed to be only one other like it.

Acting Capt. Henry Duane and Detectives Eugene Smith and Albert Doody are giving exclusive attention to the mystery.

HUSBAND AMASSED A FORTUNE IN DAMASCUS, SYRIA.

The Tarrab family is from Damascus, Syria. The husband and father, who died five years ago, was Solomon Tarrab, who amassed a fortune as a commission merchant. Some time after his death there was an influenza epidemic in Damascus, members of the family said, and they started travelling to get away from the disease. For a time they were in Egypt, later in Paris.

Then Miguel, who had established himself in business in Cuba, commercial relations that brought him frequently to New York, induced the mother to come to America with the children, nine in all, including seven daughters.

The treasures they brought with them were mostly intended as dowry for the daughters when they should marry. Miguel met them in Paris and brought them to Brooklyn, where they purchased the house in Bay Parkway. It was originally built as a two-family house, but was made into one dwelling for the large family.

BODDY, BACK HERE, JOSTLED BY THROG IN PENN STATION

down to his ears and the back of his head.

As soon as the train came to a stop in the station and Boddy saw from his window the crowd of newspaper reporters and photographers awaiting his arrival he pulled down the shade with his free hand. The notoriety he seemed to relish in Philadelphia after his arrest was another thing to him in New York, where he had killed two popular detectives.

While he was being led through the rear door to the platform there was the sudden report of a photographer's flashlight and Boddy was frightened by it. He drew back an instant, but was impelled forward by the detectives.

Then the passengers began to gather about, learning who the prisoner was, and from that time on the police had a hard time to get Boddy up the stairway and thence to the south exit of the station before which the two police automobiles were waiting.

That the trial of the slayer may be hastened by every device known to law, District Attorney Banton will ask for a special jury panel and a trial as soon as possible after Boddy's arraignment here. He has announced that he will prosecute the case himself.

A new version of the capture of the fugitive in the Philadelphia Negro lodging house was brought to this city by Assistant District Attorney Henniss of Mr. Banton's staff, who talked with the prisoner for several hours yesterday. Mr. Banton and Mr. Henniss had a long consultation upon the case to-day.

The taking of Boddy was accomplished by a stratagem in which two of his friends, members of his own race, had a hand. He was not asleep when arrested, as was first reported, and he was brought to bay with his own revolver, obtained from him by subterfuge.

It was the object of the police to take Boddy alive, and after they received word from inmates of the house that he was hiding at No. 2080 Rodman Street, Philadelphia, John Coleman, a Negro, and Edward Hopkins, his nephew, who lived there, agreed to disarm him by a ruse when the police arrived at the house.

This was accomplished through a request of Coleman's that he might show Boddy's revolver to Hopkins, who had admired it. Boddy fell easily into the trap, Coleman setting the revolver as Hopkins was descending the stairs from his room, making enough noise to cover the sound of the approach of Magistrate Scott, Patrolman Bonner and Constable Berman, all of Philadelphia. They waited outside the door until Hopkins, having obtained the revolver, walked out of the room and handed it to them.

Boddy at that time was lying on his bed hoping that by remaining there the swelling of his feet might subside so that he could put on his shoes. Then Hopkins re-entered the room with Patrolman Bonner, who had removed his uniform coat to take Boddy completely unaware. Bonner went to the bedside, leveled Boddy's own revolver at him and declared him under arrest for the New York murders. Boddy, only half awake, surrendered without a protest, saying only that he "wasn't going to make no play."

NEW YEAR'S ROBBERY JUST COMES TO LIGHT

Safe of Brooklyn Confectioners Opened and $3,000 Stolen.

Robbers defied crowds, policemen and burglar devices to get away with $3,000 from Miller Brothers, confectioners, at No. 29 De Kalb Avenue, Brooklyn, it became known to-day.

The theft was discovered Jan. 3 after the double holiday on New Year's. One of the largest banks in the city and a police signal box at the junction of three "beats" is directly across the street. The safe was opened by the combination, while the inner compartment was ripped.

VIENNA FEARS RIOTS; HOTEL DOORS CLOSED

VIENNA, Jan. 10 (Associated Press).—The doors of all hotels in the city were closed and the principal shops were shuttered this afternoon as a result of unemployment demonstrations, but there was no serious trouble or disorder.

The workmen of sixteen large factories adopted resolutions demanding the release of persons convicted in connection with the unemployment demonstrations on Dec. 1 last, when much disorder occurred in hotels and shops.

TWO MORE BILLS SUGGESTED BY GOVERNOR.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Two bills intended to carry out recommendations contained in the Governor's message were introduced to-day by Assemblyman George H. Rowe, Republican of Erie. TABBY AFTER $2,500 AS CAT SHOW ENTRY

Tibbles Hopes to Pay Off Mortgage on Bide-a-Wee Home.

Tibbles is merely a yellow and white tabby, short-haired, snub-nosed and not above poking into a garbage can, but she was in aristocratic company to-day among the pedigreed, pompous and performed entries in the United Cat Show at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Tibbles is the entry of the Bide-a-Wee Home for Animals at No. 410 East 38th Street as the pedigreed champion. She expects to purr for consolation until the home has raised $2,500 to pay off the remainder of its $5,000 mortgage due this week.

Brian G. Hughes, whose favorite practical joke on cat fanciers is to win prizes with alley cats, has an entry again this year.
